An Old Educational Center

IN the ante-bellum days, Minerva Seminary flourished as one of the first and most prominent institutions in the West. It was chartered in 1854 with five trustees, Samuel Frazee, Dr. W. H. Robertson, Samuel Forman, T. C. Newcomb and A. A. Winter. In 1856 important changes were made to meet its growing needs and the name was changed to Minerva College. It was organized as a stock company. Fifty-two men subscribed stock from one to fifteen shares of ten dollars each.

Educators of prominence graced the halls of the old institution, and among them may be mentioned such men as Westfall, Blair, May, Sherman, Durant, Thomas and Weaver.

In these days the public schools were in their infancy and the colleges were few. It was only by means of such patriotic efforts as this that education was placed within the reach of the masses.

Among the alumni will be found some of the most successful business and professional men of our country. The Minerva community today has a high class of people and a long-standing culture due to early educational advantages.

In 1909, the Board of Trustees, composed of Walter Worthington, Thomas R. Robertson, W. T. King, Robert N. Brooks and E. F. Boyd, Jr., surrendered their charter and turned over all property to the Mason County Board of Education to maintain a first-class County High School. For additional building the County Board appropriated $1,100, and a large fund was raised locally to supplement it.

Under the new management Minerva High School has had a marvelous growth and has made a statewide reputation for a high class of work.

February 13, 1913, the Committee on Accredited Standing for the Association of Colleges placed this High School on the accredited list with one more unit of work than is necessary to get freshman rank in the best Colleges and Universities. This committee is composed of Prof. C. J. Cook, Central University; Prof. R. G. Foust, Principal Owensboro High School, and Prof. McHenry Rhoads, State Supervisor of High Schools.

Minerva High School graduates are now admitted to the best institutions without examination and are making good records.

RUTH SLACK.

"Still she retains her maiden gentleness."

This sweet girl graduate is a veritable prodigy in matters relating to Mathematics, Chemistry and other intricate subjects which the writer refrains from discussing in detail lest perchance he should disclose his lamentable lack of knowledge. Endowed as well with great personal attractiveness, she is a young lady of whom we may be proud.

KATIE DWYER.

This young lady can not endure anything which savors of depression. When she enters an indigo atmosphere it immediately undergoes a remarkable metamorphosis and it becomes contagiously bright, reflecting in the faces and manners of all coming in contact with it, the optimistic spirit infused by this pleasure-loving, earnest-working girl.

O. N. WEAVER.

This promising young man, whom we delight to honor as an unusually gifted and appreciative member of the Class of '13, seems to be fully cognizant of his privilege in being one of our group and apparently has a firm determination to prove himself worthy of the distinction.

One of his marked characteristics lies in a remarkable predilection for the fair sex; but he very wisely does not permit their charms to interfere with his more serious duties, and we are thus led to predict that his career will be uniformly successful and that he will reap success wherever he goes.

AUGUSTA KELSCH.

*"A school of goodness in which chaste maids may learn
To be as she is, excellent."*

Obstacles in the path of her scholastic advancement but serve to intensify her desire to triumph and in this she usually succeeds as her record will signally attest. She has given us reasons to expect great things of her, and we entertain not the slightest fear of being disappointed.

MARY THORNTON KING.

"A countenance in which did meet Sweet records promises as sweet."

A most winning girl whose scintillating wit and gentle good humor has contributed much luster to the brightness of our school life. It is with sincere regret that we relinquish the pleasure of having for a schoolmate such a genuinely true and unaffected American girl as Mary Thornton.

EDNA MAE ROBERTSON.

"Musical as Appollo's Lute."

This charming little wild flower hails from the picturesque hills of Bracken. Gentle, vivacious and brilliant, she is the very incarnation of the spirit of that sylvan region. She loves her birthplace and her Alma Mater with an affection deep and abiding. Her presence has been a source of supreme delight these many years, and now we joyfully acclaim her as a rose among the roses and the fairest of the fair.

THOMAS E. FOLEY.

His intellect sparkles with the native brilliancy of the diamond. Among other conspicuous features are his indomitable energy, philosophical turn of mind, and a unique personality.

Quick witted and gifted by nature for leadership, he goes forth full of promise for a useful and successful career.

In spite of the "numerous peculiarities" of his nature, this precocious youngster has a laudable ambition and a just claim to achieve distinction.

In the years to follow, the members of his class will point to him with pride and exclaim, "Oh, yes, I know Judge Foley. He was a classmate of mine."

LILLIE WORTHINGTON.

"Sober, steadfast and demure."

The youngest member of the class, and if scholastic records are accurate indications of abilities, the brightest as well. Possessing, in addition to a brilliant mind, a peculiar grace of manner, she has made all her acquaintances her firm friends.

MAE WARDER WALLINGFORD.

*"A perfect woman, nobly planned
To warn, to comfort and command."*

Nothing less than Wordsworth's matchless couplet can depict the virtues of "our Mae," whose brilliancy of intellect and genial spirit has gone far toward making our school days the happy never-to-be-forgotten ones they were.

NELLIE WORTHINGTON.

"So buxom, blithe and debonair."

One of the brightest, most attractive, and interesting members of the class. She is gifted with intelligence, blessed with wide human sympathies and graced with a gentle engaging manner. We prophesy with the utmost confidence that in days to come, whenever a list of the alumni of the grand old school is compiled, Nellie's shall stand second to none.

Class History, 1913

WITH seemingly flying footsteps the end of the present school year approaches us. Then will the "Class of 1913" be disbanded, there will its aspirations, achievements, desires and realizations as well as its reverses as recorded in the history of the school and chronicled and cherished in the hearts of its members, be only a memory. It is the thought then that we must hie away, "Tomorrow to fresh fields and pastures new," recurring daily with additional stress that stimulates us instinctively to indulge in retrospection and encourages us to ponder a while over the tablets of memory whereon our history is inscribed. Scanning these reminiscences somewhat wistfully it seems we find that the oldest of us in point of attendance entered Minerva College, as it was then designated, in 1902.

This was before the era of musical and drawing instructions, and prior to the introduction of many of the improvements with which we are now blessed. The entire building at that time consisted of merely the old brick structure, containing three rooms, which was erected some fifty years before. We spent our allotted time in each of the departments of the old school, gaining in proportion as we applied ourselves. When in 1910, after the old building had proven entirely inadequate to the needs of an ever-increasing student body, the commodious new wing was added, we were in the group assigned to occupy it.

In 1904, the introduction of the Musical Department gave to those of the class possessing musical talent an exceptional opportunity to develop and enhance their natural abilities. In 1911, the singing and Art Departments were instituted, the former under the efficient supervision of Miss Small, the latter ably directed by Mrs. Norris.

The heads of each of these divisions have, according to their own statements, discovered in the school and especially in the Senior Class talents of great promise.

From its inception, in 1910, the Athletic Association has always found in the Seniors firm supporters. Many of its star players have been recruited from it. Likewise has this class been the moving spirit in the literary organizations, and assumed as well the prominent part in the school entertainments.

The personnel of the class has, owing to many additions to and depletions from it, varied widely during its history. We now number ten happy enthusiastic students. We are prepared to receive the formal acknowledgements of our completion of the curriculum of Minerva and are anxious to widen our scope of learning either in college halls or commercial pursuits. We have gained that knowledge which will tend to make us more desirable companions, more intelligent citizens and far more faithful alumni of the old school, trusting all the while that a strict observance of the principle infused into us may influence a kindly providence to mete out to us, in after life, the same generous measure of happiness with which she has so lavishly blessed us in our school days at Minerva. For our school life has certainly been memorably pleasant in every way, and I am sure that if any of us were asked to epitomize in a word his collegiate experiences, they would unhesitatingly answer pleasurable. And so I doubt not but that in after years, when in retrospective moments we gently touch with the fingers of recollection the keys of that great instrument, the Past, the notes whose harmonies shall sweeter sound and longer to cheer us as to the days gone by and inspire us as to those to come, shall be the ones which correspond to the days we spent in the springtime of our lives as members of the Class of '13 down at old Minerva High School.

Class Poem

How dear to my heart are the joys of my school days,
When memory's pages invite me to look.
It is there I recall the pleasure and by-plays
Of frolic and fun when through with our books.
There were Mary, Mae, Katie, Nellie and Ruth,
Augusta and Lillie in full bloom of youth;
Then O. N. and Tom thrown in for good measure,
While the speaker, herself, humbly joined in the pleasure.
Those dear honest faces, those bright happy faces,
Those joyful young faces we all loved so well.

Our beautiful campus was always a pleasure,
And many a game we've enjoyed to the full,
When our boys were victorious in right goodly measure
And won all their laurels with never a pull.
The wide-spreading campus, the schoolhouse, the falls,
Are pictures that hang in memory's hall,
And e'en shall stay hung there in time-honored places
Where the heart can turn backward and always recall.
But oh! those wise teachers, those grim sturdy teachers,
Those firm and kind teachers the class knew so well.

How sweet to look backward, remember the classes —
The teachers' wise faces, "exams" and the "passes;"
The failures and victories too many to tell.
How bravely we struggled to climb hills of learning.
With feet that oft wearied and struggled — and fell.
A feeling of sadness comes stealing o'er me
When I think of the bright happy days that have gone,
And the dear girlish faces no more to assemble
Before the old school door each bright sunny morn.
And now let me say on this eve, ere we part,
I wish you great happiness from the depths of my heart.

The Friend of Poor Children

The above suggestive inscription may be read in a graveyard near Minerva.

To this place the school children make annual visits to lay flowers on the grave of one who has done so much for them. Exercises are held to perpetuate his memory. His last will and testament left $12,000 in an endowment fund for Minerva School.

Dr. S. E. Pollitt, trustee of this fund, has wisely managed it so that it supports a teacher of drawing and a teacher of vocal music and extends the school term to nine months.

JAMES F. BLESS

E is seventy-six years of age, but still has the appearance of mature manhood, and strong mental attainments.

Born in Minerva, Kentucky, in the year 1837, he spent his boyhood days in this vicinity and early manhood until 1860, when he removed to Newark, State of New Jersey, where he engaged in the manufacturing business. He attended school at Minerva, and in fact received his education in this institution of learning, never having taken a course of training in any other school, except the great college of experience.

He has never, so to speak, separated himself from Minerva and its people. Always in conversation he referred to it as one of the dearest spots on earth to him. This doubtless is true of the majority of mankind. The places and people associated with our years of tenderness and first impressions make of the people celestial, and the place holy ground.

The school of Minerva had a period of depression and adversity, in which it was little better, if any, than the most ordinary of common schools.

At about this time, Mr. James M. Hieatt died and willed his modest fortune to the institution. The school then began to breathe again, to take on new life, to lift its head and come to the front.

Mr. Bless, it seems, all the time was keeping up with his old Alma Mater, and when told that our musical apparatus was below par, offered to furnish us with the needed instruments, provided we would build the room.

So, in contracting for the new High School, the James F. Bless Studio was added.

In order to get an idea of what he has done, it becomes necessary for you to visit the school and note the splendid piano, furniture, Persian rugs, pictures, portiers, and in fact everything needed for an up-to-the-hour music room.

Our prayer is, "Long may he live, his last days his best days."

MISS ANNA T. COOKE.....Piano
MISS LOUISE SMALL.....Vocal

THE musical spirit at Minerva is essentially progressive. The methods that are used not only insist upon the practical work of execution, but awaken the attention and the reflective power of the pupil as well.

They learn to appreciate the aesthetic value of music, its influence for mental exaltation and refinement and the irresistible appeal to all that is highest and best.

The general plan of the studies follows the lines of the best American conservatories, with such modifications as are necessary for general education.

It forms a complete and harmonious system, comprising lessons in piano playing, courses in violin and other stringed instruments, voice culture, and classes in theory and harmony.

The accomplished Director of Vocal Music has been marvelously successful. The pupils sing with ease and feeling, with a just perceptive sense of tone value and shading, and with simplicity and spontaneity in part songs, choruses and other pieces of ensemble.

HE chief object of interest outside the routine of our regular school work is athletics. We realize the body must be developed as well as the mind. It would be a sad day when the institutions of learning ceased to hold the physical education of man as an important factor in its curriculum. In athletics we are merely obeying the laws of nature, the laws of God. To keep a pure, clean body, take plenty of exercise. To refrain from dissipation, eat proper food and stay in open air as much as possible. Some of the advantages derived are not only soundness of body and good health, but it cultivates obedience, self-control, discipline, a determination to succeed regardless of opposing numbers, a jovial spirit when facing overwhelming odds, adversity, and defeat. The Duke of Wellington was once asked as to what did he attribute his success. He said: "It was on the football fields of Eton and Rugby where I received the training to which I owe my success in after life." A source of pride of this institution is in its clean players and the manly treatment showed by them to their opponents whether defeated or victorious.

Our motto is taken from the Golden Rule.

Basket-Ball Team

ORGANIZED our first team in 1910, though played a light schedule. The team was very promising. Defeated in most of the games that season, however, they showed courage and perseverance.

In the following season of 1911-12 they met with utmost success, not only defeating those who proved superior the former season, but also the teams of many other neighboring high schools, suffering from only one defeat.

Season of 1912-13 opened with the usual interest displayed. Again having a limited schedule, the team was the victor in the majority of contests.

The games were hailed with keen interest and delight by the many and enthusiastic rooters who always encouraged the players and shared equally with them in the rejoicing of victory or the deep regret in defeat.

The skill of the players was displayed in the beautiful team work, together with their quick forethought and action.

Track Team

SEASON of 1912 opened finding the team training for the Kentucky high-school meet to be held at the State University. Though only short notice was given of the meet at Lexington, which was to be May 4th, found the M. H. S. boys on the field ready to bear their part in the contest. The meet was the first of its kind in the state and proved a success. The Minerva M. H. S. boys held third place. Their opponents were of the leading high schools of Kentucky. A dual meet with Flemingsburg H. S. on May 18th was the last of the season, Minerva winning forty points out of a total of sixty-two, besides the mile relay. A beautiful silver loving cup was awarding the winning team in the mile relay. This was carried home by the M. H. S. boys.

The coming season of 1913 is looked forward to with great interest. Extensive preparations are being made for a grand high-school track and field meet. The state is divided into four divisions, with centers at Maysville, Shelbyville, Richmond and Madisonville.

A meet is to be held in each of these centers on a certain date, and each high school decides to which of these centers it will send its team. The individuals making a good record in preliminary meets will be eligible to compete in the final meet held at Lexington.

This will make the winners at Lexington state champions.

School Wagon

Transportation of Pupils

THE Minerva patrons use the stock-company plan to provide transportation of pupils. They bought an Olsen wagon for $175, including $25 freight, from Pittsboro, Ind., and sold 35 shares, $5 each, as follows:

|--------------------------|---|
| Charles Wallingford..... | 5 |
| William Colvin..... | 5 |
| John Wallingford..... | 5 |
| C. T. Moore..... | 5 |
| Arthur Donovan..... | 5 |
| Neal Dwyer..... | 5 |
| Casper Haughaboo | 5 |

They elected Charles Wallingford President, and William Colvin Secretary, and employed Allen Slack as driver at $45 per month. Each patron is assessed in proportion to the number of children riding, to pay cost of transportation. Fifteen pupils at 15 cents a day will pay expense. The plan works admirably.

There are twelve more school wagons in Mason County, and four consolidated schools.

Nine of these wagons are supported by local taxation and three by Fiscal Court levy.

WITH thirty active members, this Club has led all the clubs in Mason County and ranks among the first in the state. Mason County leads all of the counties in Kentucky in the amount of corn produced per acre. Minerva is located in one of its richest agricultural belts. Boys are taught to test corn, to cultivate scientifically and to judge corn. In the course of study, agriculture is emphasized both in the grades and in High School.

Mason County held the first School Fair in Kentucky, in 1912, and its success was most gratifying.

The School Fair and Corn Show, February 22, 1913, exceeded all expectations. Minerva Boys' Club won nearly one-half of the corn prizes, as follows:

EXCERPTS FROM TOASTS

At a Banquet on the Occasion of Semi-Centennial Reunion of the Class of 1856

“There is one sad side that we can not and must not forget, and that is that, of those who mingled together where you now are, fifty years ago, the majority have passed over the great divide, and as they march before us in memory, we must lift the hat and bow the head as they pass by.”

JAMES F. BLESS.

“The most important event in the history of this community was the incorporation of Minerva College fifty years ago, and you have acted wisely in making a Jubilee Celebration of this great event. This splendid school has, from its beginning to this good hour, been a pillar of strength to the town of Minerva. It has been a great beacon light to this whole section of the counties of both Mason and Braeken, shedding its beneficent rays far and wide, and inciting a laudable inspiration in the minds of boys and girls who long for opportunities to reach out after and grasp the prizes of life.”

HON. CLARENCE L. SALLEE.

“In conclusion, let me say, if I had a voice that would vibrate from the Atlantic to the Pacific, I would send it forth this afternoon, across this Continent of ours, echoing from hill to hill, and would shout these words: ‘Long live the remnant of the Class of 1856, and Old Minerva College.’ ”
